Definition

Spaces by Function are basic units of the built environment delineated by physical or abstract boundaries and characterized by function.

Discussion

A space is a part of the built environment that is marked off in some way. It is usually a component forming a larger, more significant construction entity.

A space can be delineated by either physical or abstract boundaries. Often these are environmental parameters such as walls and roofs which separate the interior space from adjacent spaces. Other spaces such as airport approach zone are delineated by non-corporeal, abstract boundaries.

Spaces have a purpose or use. This is their function and the concern of this table. Spaces can be occupied by people, things, and substances and serve as mediums for activities and movement.

Spaces also have physical form and this is the concern of Table 14 - Spaces by Form. There may or may not be a correlation between the form of a space and its function and most spaces can accommodate many different functions throughout their useful life.

Examples

Kitchen, Mechanical Shaft, Office, Highway

Table Uses

Storing and retrieving information, space planning, construction project programming and budgeting, compiling historical cost and operation data, designating spaces and activities for building codes and ordinances, inventorying spaces for property transfer, classifying spaces for facility management operations and categorizing objects for software.

Table Users

Librarians, design professionals, space planners and programmers, estimators, building officials, real estate agents, facility managers, and computer programmers.
